woah, what the heck is this? I just want to read a blog post about how to overcome writer's block. You're making this too complicated. I don't think that's even a word, and I'm sorry if it is, but you're clearly not trying very hard if you can't even spell it. This probably isn't the blog post you were looking for.

This is the future of journalism! To the writer's block article! Gracias. I've been looking for a while.

So it's almost March and I haven't started writing my novel yet. The holidays were good, but they put me in this weird limbo. I keep thinking back to last year and what I accomplished and for some reason that makes me not want to write anything. It's like, "well if I'm not going to write a novel then I might as well take another flight out of town." It took me six months last year to do ... nothing (my goal was to write three action scenes). The flight (to nowhere) is what I need. Writing doesn't give you anything, except maybe the illusion of control. If I get back on that plane, maybe I'll snap out of it. So far this year I've done three flights (to the front porch of my sister's house in Santa Fe, to an island in Maine where my grandfather had a beach house, and to my new apartment in San Francisco), but none of them did much for me. So if you're reading this and you're into writing, don't listen to people who tell you not to write because it'll mess up your head or whatever. . .write anyway. I had another dream about writing last night. I was flying through the air. I don't know where I was, but it was like all the stars were in my way. It's something about having my life figured out ... but I can't really remember what it means. I guess, thanks for the advice, and sorry that it wasn't exactly what you wanted to hear. Anyway, it sounds like you're suffering from a bad case of writer's block. I have some tips that might help you get started or at least feel less guilty about procrastinating. Do you have an outline? I think outlining saves everyone time in the long run because it gives you a clear direction for your writing session. Even if the outline is just a few sentences, that's enough to give you structure without stifling your creativity.

You have to be smarter than the work. You are not smarter than the work! That is like saying, "I'm smarter than my boss," or "I'm smarter than my teacher."
